Timely Tips

- Keep winter and spring weeds at bay; apply granular Amaze or liquid Weed Impede pre-emergent now, according to the label.
- If your bulbs are poking up through the soil, cover with a minimum of 3" of Gardner & Bloom Soil Building Compost to moderate soil temperature and protect new growth. Add more if necessary.
- Apply Bonide All Seasons Horticultural & Dormant Oil to trees and shrubs to prevent insect infestations. Spray three weeks later and before buds swell with Monterey Liqui-Cop to control leaf diseases such as peach leaf curl and powdery mildew.
- Prune fruit trees in late February or early March.

"Pruning" Tips from Plant Doctor Jon

Winter is, in my mind, a resting time for plants. It's also a great time to prune your deciduous trees and shrubs because they are still dormant, waiting for spring to stimulate their growth -- so any stress from removing a moderate number of limbs will be minimal.

With warm spring weather just around the corner, plants will soon grow and start producing callus growth around your pruning cut. If your cut is properly made, healing time will be much faster and therefore the wound will be less exposed to the

Bird of the Month: Yellow-Rumped Warbler:

It is no surprise that the yellow-rumped warbler is one of the most familiar warblers of North America; this bird is one of the first to arrive in the spring and the last to leave in the fall, and during the winter months it is the most abundant warbler in North America. While Yellow-rumped Warblers were formerly classified as two distinct species, today the Audubon's and Myrtle warblers are both butter-butts.

Yellow-rumped Warblers are fairly large, full-bodied warblers with a large head, sturdy bill and long, narrow tail. In summer, both sexes are a smart gray with flashes of white in the wings and yellow on the face, sides and rump. Males are very strikingly shaded; females are duller and may show some brown. Winter birds are paler brown with bright yellow rump and usually some yellow on the sides.

Yellow-rumped Warblers can be found throughout North America in brushy coniferous and mixed forests, suburban parks and agricultural areas. The Audubon's variation with its yellow throat, is most common in western regions while the Myrtle plumage is more common in the north and east.

In winter, butter-butts will visit feeders for sunflower seeds, suet, raisins and peanut butter.
