November's High Desert Bird-of-the-Month:

White-crowned & Golden- crowned Sparrows

Late fall and all of winter provide an opportunity to see beautiful members of the sparrow family in your backyard. White-crowned Sparrows are a winter resident and a common sight in yards all over the Truckee Meadows.

White-crowns are a large sparrow with a long tail. They are easy to identify with the crisp black and white crown stripes of the adults and their pink or yellow bill. First winter (immature) birds sport buff and brown head stripes. White-crowned males are one of the few birds you will hear singing in the winter; their song is described as a series of clear whistles followed by buzzy notes. Female birds will sometimes sing, also.

This bird spends the summer on tundra or in boreal forests of Canada and Alaska. During summer they supplement a seed diet with insects, grains and fruit.

Local Bird Sightings by Jacque Lowery

What glorious fall colors we have had this year! The pyracanthas are loaded with brilliant orange berries; the fruit is abundant on flowering crabapples.

All the winter-time avian visitors have arrived; the morning air is full of the song of the White-crowned Sparrow. Why they sing in non-breeding season I don't know, but it is a joy to have bird song during dark dreary days of winter. The juveniles are just now getting the hang of their song and sometimes sound like they are singing under water.

White-crowned Sparrows

This is a great time for variety in our backyard birds. Now is a good time to evaluate your feeding station to see if you are providing the proper buffet tables for all the possible species. Suet feeders will attract not only the resident woodpeckers and wrens, but also the wintering Yellow-rumped Warbler and the occasional Bushtit gang. Black oil sunflower or a WBU seed blend with sunflower is the best choice for tube feeders or hopper feeders.

November Nature Happenings

- * Project Feeder Watch starts and extends until April, www.birds.cornell.edu/pfw
- * Average temperature: 36.2°F, Average precipitation: 0.52"
- * The onset of winter snow and cold in the higher elevations can often bring "irruptions" of mountain species into the valley and plains.
- * Steller's Jays, the beautiful black-crested jay of the mountain forests, may relocate to lower altitudes.
- * The resident Western Scrub-Jays will squawk their resentment of the Steller's, as they all search for high-energy nuts and oil seeds.
- * Pinon Jays, normally found exclusively in the southern pinon/juniper lands, may move further north in search of winter food.
- * Pine Siskins may move in large numbers to lower regions, and will socially join flocks of American Goldfinches to visit finch feeders.
- * Juncos become common at feeders.
- * Waterfowl migration peaks this month.
- * Mule Deer bucks go into rut.
- * Open water is important if there's an early freeze. Put out heated bird baths for a winter water source.
- * Leonid meteor shower is mid-month
